“ I lit the periwinkle candle to remember your beautiful blue eyes, that lit the light all the way to your soul. For what seemed to be a life time we were raised as sisters, dressed alike, same lunches, different lunch boxes! I still remember the time you picked up my huge eraser that had my name written on it, threw it, and hit Mr. Hall in the back of the head with it. Of course I'm the one who got the SWATS in front of the class, but when we got home and Mom heard about it, it was your turn! LOL! We sure had some fun times! Floyd building us ramps to crash over on our bicycles! All the brotherly tortures we could stand, But we wouldn't trade him for a million dollars. At least I still have some memories of us being raised together, and I am really going to miss you..... I remember what Mom always told us, every hair on your head is counted, and when it is you time, it's your time. She is Cherokee, you know. I refer to her in the present because she is with the Lord, but she is with me at times as well. You no longer have to suffer in this life you are with the Lord now, you are blessed. You have EARNED YOUR WINGS!!!! YOU ARE MISSED MORE THAN YOU KNOW.... HORSERADISH FOREVER!!! (inside joke) LOVE YA, SIS!
