“ Just remembering Lenore, a lady I met often on the city bus when we attended KVCC and worked or shopped in the area.

She was such a nice person. Taught me about Opera, of all things. She also had a strong interest in Egyptian history, and in the history and practice of the Catholic Faith.

And of course, in her cats!

Beautiful red hair that one day was going very well with her rose lipstick. I complimented her on the lipstick and she smiled and said happily "It's a blend!" Well, it would have to be, for the subtle depth of color.

I also admired her reasonable Sanity, in the face of personal adversity and health challenges.

O.K. : two more quotes---1:--on predestination in some Christian beliefs "God wouldn't create souls just to destroy them" (and she felt the same about nuclear annihilation "God won't let that happen.")

---1 1/2 to 2:--Many people actually have to do art work because it is their vocation, even if they are not outstanding or successful.

A sweet life well lived, Miss Lenore!
